part of any member; or, another names of those for whom departmental regulations had been exceeded in an improper manner by Beavers. Instead of doing either of these things, the committee brought in the whole budget of information, recommended that the Hay resolution be tabled, accompanying this with a statement that that no wrong could be imputed to any member whose name is mentioned in the department report. This would have been all tion. That investigation showed that crime had been committed, and frauds perpetratnames paraded in a report headed "Charges | $130. Concerning Members of Congress," There is warrant for this resentment on the part of the innocent members, in view of the treatment which the supplemental report ers. In some quarters the whole report was treated by newspapers as 'an expose of members of Congress," and in others as "evidences of congressional grafting," etc. This was not only unfair to members, but wholly unwarranted.

Now, it is easy to show, from an analysis | slightest evidence of wrong-doing could be of the supplemental report, just what is disclosed by it, and just what a close and unbiased investigation of the whole subject will demonstrate. And this can be done without attempting to shield anybody who appears even on the face of the findings to be technically guilty of participation in wrong done by indicted department officials. It may be said that such unbiased analysis of the report will show been made public at all and explanation probably can be made of the few cases in which it appears that over zeal on the an Indiana member received a letter from part of a few members, say in Illinois and Virginia, and in the cases where it appeared that certain members had leased sildings for postoffices. In the Illinois and Virginia cases, in which figure the names of former members of the postoffice committee, it would appear that on their recommendations, based, no doubt, on requests from their local postmasters, the regulations of the department respecting the amount of clerk hire allowances for separating mails at such offices were exceeded by Beavers. But that is a violation of departmental regulations by Beavers, not a violation by the postmasters or the members who recommended action. In the cases of the leases of postoffices, explanations have been made by the members, three in number, from Connecticut and Kansas, showing that the department declined to cancel leases after the owners of the buildings had been elected to Congress and had permitted the leases to be transferred to others.

And there should be noted an interesting fact explanatory of the system which prevails in the department. One case is shown in the record where an increase in by the department credited to the "White House." That is easily explained. Doubtless the postmaster in the town of Stratford, Conn., wrote to the President of the United States about the matter and the

It is not surprising in view of the facts, that the members of Congress whose names are included in the report, although not even the imputed to them, should be incensed.

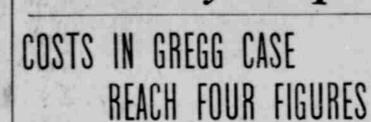

> Another illustration will show how it is that even up to the present day such difficulties are experienced by representatives It is true that too much is expected of members in the matter of errand running in the various departments here. While but little drilling is being done just at the presthe operators are busy putting their frozenup leases in shape to produce the pentup product, after being dormant for several weeks. The recent decline in the price of the crude product does not make the average mine the causes for a decline in price. In the Trenton rock and Eastern fields for and Indian Territory fields are producing less than 2,000 barrels a day. The output of the wells of Wyoming and Colorado is insignificant. In Kentucky and Tennessee the Taking all the above fields combined, their production is less than the shipments by a few hundred barrels, which shows conclusively that the stocks of high-grade crude are diminishing rapidly. The California fields have no effect whatever upon the markets of oil, owing to the low-grade crude. The outlook of the Texas field is more alarming, as the field at Batson Prairie, in that State, is credited with a production of nearly 100,000 barrels a day. The output of the Sour Lake field is 15,000 barrels a day; Spindle Top, 13,000 barrels; Saratoga, 3,000 barrels, and Jennings, about 3,200 barrels, making a total daily production in Texas alone of about 134,200 barrels.
